

Description of an Object

Descriptive Essays consist of 4 paragraphs:

Paragraph 1: An introduction where you state what you are describing.

Paragraphs 2+3: Each of these should describe a different aspect of the object.

Paragraph 4: End with a conclusion. The conclusion is there to wrap up the description and provide final thoughts about the described object.

Example: Your school newspaper has asked readers to write on the following topic:

Describe an object you would take to a desert island. Write a passage for the newspaper describing what you like about the object and why you consider it to be of such importance.

There are many objects I consider meaningful and essential. However, no object is as important and useful as my iPhone, since in addition to its basic function which allows me to talk to other people while I am almost anywhere, it possesses a few other functions I cannot do without.

To begin with, there are numerous fascinating entertainment features on my iPhone. First, its music player capabilities allow me to play music and even record audio. Second, I can also play videos and watch clips or movies while on the go. Third, I use the camera to take pictures and then share them in my Facebook, Google plus and twitter profile.

In addition, iPhone applications extend the functionality of the phone and help my productivity. Word and spreadsheet processors are available, and when I need on-the-go computing I find this a great benefit. What's more, the applications allow me to store data, thus enable me to carry my files around ensuring that I am always with important documents for school or my personal life.

In conclusion, my iPhone is an efficient communication device which has a lot of unique advantages that make my life easier. The iPhone is engineered to meet almost all my needs since its multifunctional tools are available wherever I go.
